Evolution and tasks:

The Chinese Academy of Social Sciences is the research center for the social sciences in the People's Republic of China and has 32 institutes: Philosophy; Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought; World Religions; Economics; Industrial Economics; Agricultural Economics; Finance and Trade; Econometrics and Technology-Related Economics (preparatory section); Economics of China's Urban and Rural Construction; Literature; Minority Literature; Foreign Literature; Linguistics; History [pre-1840]; Modern History; World History; Archaeology; Law; Political Science (preparatory section); Nationalities; Sociology; Journalism; Youth and Juvenile Affairs; World Economics and Politics; Soviet and East European Studies; American Studies; Japanese Studies; West European Studies; West Asian and African Studies; Latin American Studies; South Asian Studies; and Scientific Information. In addition, there are the Demography Research Center; the History and Geography Research Center for China's Borderlands; Guo Moruo's [6753 3106 5387] Old Residence and the Compilation and Publication Board for the Works of Guo Moruo; the Commission on Chinese Historical Seismological Data; the Chinese Local Gazetteer Guidance Group; ZHONGGUO SHEHUI KEXUE [SOCIAL SCIENCES IN CHINA]; and Chinese Social Science Publishing House. The academy also manages the Chinese Language Reform Committee.

The former designation of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences was the Philosophy and Sociology Department of the Chinese Academy of Sciences. In 1950, three institutes (Archaeology, Linguistics and Modern History) were founded under the Chinese Academy of Sciences. After 1952, founded in sequence were the Philosophy Institute, the Economics Institute, the Literature Institute, the History Institute, the Linguistics Institute of National Minorities, and the Academic Information Research Division. In 1958, the Law Institute and Nationalities Institute were founded. In 1964, a group of institutes studying foreign affairs were founded, namely the World Economics Institute, the Foreign Literature Institute, the World History Institute and the World Religions Institute. In 1966, there were 13 institutes in the Philosophy and Sociology Department, Chinese Academy of Sciences. In addition, the department compiled and published more than 10 academic journals, such as XINJIANSHE [NEW CONSTRUCTION], ZHIXUE YANJIU [PHILOSOPHICAL RESEARCH], JINGJI YANJIU [ECONOMIC RESEARCH], WENXUE PINGLUN [LITERARY CRITICISM], SHIJIE WENXUE [WORLD LITERATURE], ZHONGGUO YUWEN [CHINESE LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE], FAXUE YANJIU [LEGAL RESEARCH], MINZU YANJIU [NATIONALITY RESEARCH], LISHI YANJIU [HISTORICAL RESEARCH], KAOGU XUEBAO [ARCHAEOLOGY JOURNAL], and KAOGU [ARCHAEOLOGY].

To promote philosophy and sociology, the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences was founded in 1977. In March 1978, at the first session of the Fifth National People's Congress, Hu Qiaomu [5170 0829 2606] was appointed president of the academy, and research institutes were gradually founded thereafter, such as the Economics Institute, the International Problems Institute, the Sociology Institute, the Political Science Institute, and the Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought Institute. Moreover, journals were published, including ZHONGGUO SHEHUI KEXUE [SOCIAL SCIENCES IN CHINA]. At present, the academy publishes 57 journals.

According to 1982 year-end figures, there were 5,145 people in the academy, including 2,469 research personnel, 420 editors, 100 engineers and technicians, and 78 translators.

The highest authority of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences is vested in the Academy Affairs Committee, which nominates the honorary president, the president and the vice presidents and decides major tasks regarding research and administration and appointments and replacements of important cadres. The president and vice presidents are appointed for 3-year terms. The secretary-general and deputy secretaries-general serve under a permanent appointment system, and the secretary-general is empowered by the president to conduct the routine activities of the academy. The associated institutes bring in experts from inside and outside the academy to serve on an evaluation organization--an academic committee.

After the founding of the People's Republic of China, philosophy and sociology have been emphasized by the Chinese Communist Party and people's government. Thus philosophy and sociology research tasks have been greatly developed. The growth is unprecedented when compared to that of before liberation, be it the quantity and quality of research results, or the scale of organizational growth. Especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee in 1978, long-standing errors of dogmatism and individual superstition were cleared away in serious realization of the principle of letting a hundred flowers bloom and letting a hundred schools of thought contend. Thus, philosophy and sociology research tasks entered an unprecedentedly propitious situation with expanding active academic discussions and research results. The social sciences play increasingly important functions in China's socialist modernization program. According to statistics, in 1982 alone 6,588 research results were produced (by the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences), including 127 monographs, 84 booklets, 3,973 papers, 432 investigative reports, and 25 reference books.

Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought serve as the guidelines for research work conducted by the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. The academy studies the history of and contemporary affairs in China and other countries, the basic theories of each of the social sciences and especially the theoretical and practical problems of China's socialist modernization program. Through scientific research, the academy contributes to China's socialist modernization program and to the prosperity and progress in the social sciences.

Address: No 2 Yeutan Beixiaojie, Fuchengmenwai, Beijing

Telephone: 89-5323

Founding, history and evolution: The former designation of the Economics Institute was the Sociology Institute of old China's Academia Sinica, which was headed by Tao Menghe. Following liberation, the institute focused on economic history. In 1953, the institute received its present name and was placed under the Chinese Academy of Sciences, with Di Chaobai [1327 0396 4101] as acting director. In 1958, the Economics Institute was placed under dual administration of the State Planning Commission and the Philosophy and Sociology Department of the Chinese Academy of Sciences, and Sun Yefang [1327 0396 2455] served as acting director, later becoming director. In 1977, the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences was founded, the Economics Institute was then administered by this newly founded academy and Xu Dixin was appointed director of the institute.

Directions and tasks: Under the guidance of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, the Economics Institute systematically studies general political economics, including the political economics of pre-socialist social forms and the political economics of socialism, with emphasis on the latter. Focusing on general political economics, the institute employs historical facts to study the history of economics and the history of economic thought both in China and abroad, especially the modern and contemporary periods. The institute also employs contemporary means to study important problems in modern capitalist and socialist economics, especially the comprehensive problems China confronts in socialist construction, so as to better serve national development.

Address: No 1 Dongchang Lane, Wangfujing Avenue, Beining
Telephone exchange: 55-5131

Founding, history and successive changes: The former designation of the institute was the World History Section of the History Institute, which was founded in December 1959, expanded into the World History Research Division in 1963, and in May 1964, it formally became the World History Institute.

Research directions and tasks: The institute mainly studies modern and contemporary history, but research on ancient and medieval history has also been initiated. Through comprehensive comparative research, the institute probes the laws of historical development of human society; the political and economic development and change experienced by various countries; and the causes of the emergence, decline and succession of social systems and other problems reflecting the patterns of social development. The institute conducts monographic research on a wide variety of topics and thus is able to produce high-quality works on special topics, individual countries and regions and world history.

For a long period of time, the institute emphasized: (1) the historical experience of the Soviet Union's transition from capitalism to socialism, (2) the establishment and evolution of the modern capitalist political system, and (3) the historical effects and roles of differing developmental stages and capitalist classes in the democratic nationalist movements in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

The present task is to make monographic studies and make preparations to begin compilation of a multi-volume SHIJIE TONGSHI [GENERAL WORLD HISTORY].
